The Story and You

Secret of Communion

Second Sunday of Lent

One hot August 6th in 1985, we were packed and ready to head home after another great summer of study at the University of Notre Dame. During the last few minutes of our last class, the brilliant Nathan Mitchell, OSB, sent us home with these words:

Today is the Feast of the Transfiguration, that moment in time when the blinding light from heaven enveloped Jesus as he prayed on the sacred mountain. But we also remember today another flash of light, the white light of the atomic bomb at Hiroshima forty years ago today. So, as you travel home, pondering those two very different lights, I offer you this promise: if, through circumstances of famine, drought and war, the arsenals of the world are emptied into every city, every farmland, every mountain and ocean, and the earth is plunged into endless darkness, the light of the Transfigured Christ will burn brighter than that darkness.

I wonder if that's what Moses and Elijah said to Jesus as they spoke with him about his death and resurrection. He was on his way to Jerusalem to confront the Prince of Darkness at the Cross. I think they were reminding him that things would look very different in Easter Light.

Sharing God's Word at Home:

As you face suffering, what prayers or Gospel accounts give you strength?
